Two Millionth Boy Scout on Staff at Trapshooting

In addition to hosting the 2 millionth Eagle Scout (Anthony Thomas, the emcee of the opening arena show), the 2010 Jamboree is also host to the 2 millionth Boy Scout: Ernest Wieting.

As a young boy growing up in the Bronx in post-World War II America, Mr. Wieting joined an Explorer post as a way to get out of the city and see the countryside. A few months after he joined, he was informed that he was officially the 2 millionth registered Boy Scout and was invited to attend a luncheon to celebrate the 41st anniversary of the BSA.

At the luncheon, held at the Commodore Hotel on February 8, 1951 (now the Grand Hyatt next to Grand Central Terminal), special guest Brig. Gen. Carlos P. Romulo directed Mr. Wieting to recite the Scout Oath and presented him with special scout credentials.

"It felt like a couple thousand people," he recalled, though news reports of the event put the attendance at about 1,000. Mr. Wieting became a temporary spokesperson for the BSA, appearing on radio stations and in several newspapers in successive months.

As an Explorer, Mr. Wieting enjoyed visits to Floyd Bennett Field, New York City's first municipal airport, located in Brooklyn. There, he practiced his piloting skills on a Link Trainer, an early mechanical flight simulator. He also remembers camping at Camp Alpine and Ten Mile River Scout Reservation.

After completing high school a year early, Mr. Wieting joined the Army and trained at Ft. Drum in upstate New York and here at Ft. A.P. Hill as part of a construction battalion. He recalled learning how to mine and de-mine an area on the fields of A.P. Hill. After being discharged as a Sgt. First Class after eight years in the Army, Mr. Wieting joined the New York Police Department, where he worked as a detective.

This is Mr. Wieting's second Jamboree in recent memory (he couldn't remember if he attended the 1957 Jamboree at Valley Forge). He's serving on the trapshooting staff at Action Center D.

Chaplain's Corner

“ We learned a lot from our Creator this week: more about nature, weather and living together with others. Continue your Jamboree experience by continuing to help your neighbor a/ways! ”

100th Anniversary Arena Show

Eagle Scout Mike Rowe, host of the TV show Dirty Jobs, encouraged the more than 70,000 Scouts, Scouters and visitors in attendance at Saturday's arena show not to be afraid to get dirty.

Mr. Rowe was the keynote speaker at the 100th Anniversary Arena Show, the "Shining Light Across America." He told stories of how Scouting prepared him to resolve uncomfortable situations and how he learned getting dirty wasn't so bad.

He offered six tenants in defense of dirt:

1. I believe the willingness to get dirty is a fundamental requirement of civilized society.
2. I believe that God created dirt, not cleaning products.
3. I believe that a clean mind and a dirty body can walk around in the same skin.
4. I believe that honest work looks an awful lot like dirt.
5. I believe that without dirt, we don't eat.
6. I believe that it's absolutely, positively essential to play in the mud.

Scouts also heard from Chief Scout Executive Bob Mazzucca, who encouraged Scouts to follow the theme of the show and be a shining light across America during a candlelight ceremony. Scouts were also introduced to the Bechtel Summit in West Virginia, site of the 2013 National Jamboree, and saw a video address from President Barack Obama.

Musical groups Switchback, Honor Society and singer Sarah Centeno performed. Pre-show entertainment included the US Army Special Operations Command Black Daggers parachuters and a video display of text messages sent to BSA100 (including two marriage proposals and a request for clean socks). The show concluded with a huge fireworks show, billed as the largest on a military base.

The audience in the arena was joined via with other gatherings in New York City; Raleigh, NC; Jacksonville, FL; Rapid City, SD; and Fort Wayne, ID and was telecast to other local councils across the country.
